

The Megalithic Culture in the North of Jordan

Zeinab Bishtawi

Hashemite University, Jordan

The study of Megalithic Culture is one of the most interesting topics in field of Archaeology since there are unresolved issues concerning them and need further investigation. The interpretation of their functions is still a puzzle. The buildings of Megaliths have been known over different parts of the world like those in North and South Europe, in the Near East and in different parts of Asia and Africa. In spite of the different dates of these monuments they share a lot in common. For instance, there is no connection between all of these monuments and the human settlements that were contemporary to them. The archaeological finds, which were covered in these monuments, are few. Therefore, there is a great need to study some of the aspects concerning these monuments, with the help of new modern technologies like digital photographing and photogrammetry.

The poster is going to show the megalithic features and display their distribution in North Jordan. The main target of this study is to explain the megaliths phenomena according to their typology and distribution. The study will go further to describe these features and make a comparison between specific fields that cover Jordan. The results will shed light on the megaliths' classifications in this study and pervious ones which were conducted before on the same region.